

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

An automatic telephone, Internet or intranet community formation system that utilizes spoken words or matching search terms. The invention utilizes wireless and wired voice communications, database and list serve technology to archive and match users based upon their search terms entered into a telephone system or a search engine, Internet, intranet, extranet, local area network or wide area network or standalone computer. A community formation system refers to a means of inviting via voice, email or other method matched searchers to join in a discussion or communicate via text or voice. Invitations to join would be sent via a phone, web browser, email or fax communication. The user would have control over whether s/he wanted to be invited into a community, the age of desired matches, the closeness or breadth of the matches, the duration of the community, and the type of community - voice or text. Also, users have the ability to conduct joint searches and jointly and severally rate the content information, websites, or other subjects and to pick settings to establish his or her actual identity or to adopt an anonymous identity.

FIG. 1 Internet, Intranet or Telephone System and components of the invention

Internet, intranet, or telephone system

Users	Invention
Unique ID 1	Computer or Phone
Unique ID 2	